

Moshe Schechter

Department of Physics

- Properties of disordered and amorphous systems at low temperatures, including the nature and properties of two-level systems, which are the dominant degrees of freedom at low energies.
- Quantum magnetism: Theoretical study of magnetic insulators at low temperatures, including the interplay between interactions, disorder, and quantum fluctuations in correlated many body systems.