

Coby Morvinski is a member of the Guilford Glazer Faculty of Business and Management in Ben Gurion University. He received his Ph.D. in Marketing from the University of California in San Diego. Before entering academia, he worked in the software industry where he served in various management positions both in Israel and in the US. He also holds an MBA from Manchester University and a B.Sc. in Industrial Engineering from Tel Aviv University. His research focuses on consumer behavior, particularly on new product adoption, social influence, as well as judgment and decision making. His other research interests include behavioral economics and pro-social behavior.