

Dr. Tehila Kalagy holds a doctorate in public administration and local government. She is a Lecturer in the Department of Public Policy & Administration at the Guilford-Glazer Faculty of Business & Management, Ben-Gurion University of the Negev, and a member of research groups at the Israel Democracy Institute and the Truman Institute at the Hebrew University.

Dr. Kalagy's primary research interests are integration policy of minorities in education and employment, intercultural management, academic processes in conservative societies, local government and quality of service in the public sector.

Tehila served as the principal of the ultra-Orthodox College in Jerusalem and was a partner in the opening of special academic programs for ultra-Orthodox society. In light of her research and professional experience, Tehila is considered an expert in the field of research and planning for higher education for minority groups and their optimal integration into the employment world.

She recently won a research grant from the Ministry of Science to examine the enhanced quality of integration of women from minority groups in the Israeli economy: specifically of ultra-Orthodox and Bedouin women.
