Professor Ayala Malach-Pines was an organizational, social and clinical psychologist who headed for six years the Department of Business Administration at the BGU Guilford Glazer Faculty of Business and Management. She served as Dean of the Faculty until her untimely death in 2012.

She was one of the pioneers in the study of burnout and published extensively on the subject. Her Burnout Measure has been used by researchers all over the world.

Prof. Pines published ten books, thirty book chapters and over one hundred research articles. Her books were translated into many languages including French, German, Spanish, Greek, Polish, Turkish, Chinese, Korean and Japanese.

Prof. Pines supervised many PhD students and her research interests included such topics as: Job burnout and couple burnout in dual earner families; Stress and burnout in multinational virtual teams; Psychological and cultural aspects of entrepreneurship; Psychological determinants of career choice in management and entrepreneurship; and the role of gender and culture in work in general and management in particular.

In 2008 Prof Pines was awarded the President's Award for Excellence in Scientific Research. He army service was as a psychology officer in the Israeli Air Force.