Swanee Hunt is the Eleanor Roosevelt Lecturer in Public Policy, founder of the Women and Public Policy Program, senior fellow at the Center for Public Leadership, and senior advisor at the Carr Center for Human Rights, all at Harvard's Kennedy School of Government. Raised in Dallas, she made her mark as a civic leader and philanthropist in her adopted city of Denver, where for two decades she led community initiatives on social justice issues such as public education, affordable housing, women's empowerment, gay rights, and mental health reform for two mayors and the governor of Colorado. Swanee Hunt founded and chairs the Washington-based Institute for Inclusive Security, whose bold goal is to transform decision making about war and peace. Through government consultation, research, leadership development, and advocacy, Inclusive Security increases the participation of all stakeholders—particularly women—in preventing, resolving, and rebuilding after deadly conflicts. Her seminal work in this area began when, as the US Ambassador to Austria from 1993 to 1997, she hosted negotiations and international symposia focused on stabilizing the neighboring Balkan states. She continues in this path in many spheres of lives, and raises many initiatives.
