The Rationality of Perception

On a traditional conception of the human mind, reasoning can be rational or irrational, but perception cannot. Perception is simply a source of new information, and cannot be assessed for rationality. ... The Rationality of Perception argues that reasoning and perception are often deeply intertwined. The course is based on Susanna Siegel's new book in which she undermines the traditional conception.